CORONATION OF KING IN ATHENS NEXT MAY

President Must Decide Whether He Will Be Represented by Special Envoy.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FORTENOY.

PRESIDENT WILSON will be shortly called upon to determine whether or not he will be represented at the coronation of King Constantine of Greece, by special envoy.

The coronation is to take place at Athens, in May. Those of the great powers which have a monarchical government will send special missions, headed by princes, to meet with Greece for the occasion, and it is understood that either the Prince of Wales or his sailor brother, Prince Albert, who is serving on board England's naval squadron in the Mediterranean, will head the English mission.

The French republic will be represented by some high naval or military dignitary and it remains to be seen whether or not President Wilson will dispatch a special envoy, or content himself with being represented by the resident American minister at Athens.

The chief magistrate of the United States was represented by a special embassy at the coronation of King Edward, and at that of King George. The difficulty about the American special embassy is the question of the money which the government has at its disposal for the purpose is of a very limited character, and the result is that it is necessary to find a special ambassador who is willing to pay the expenses of the heavy expenditure incidental to such a mission out of his own pocket. The nomination does not require confirmation by the Senate, and is regarded as a purely personal appointment of the President.

Several offers were made to President Roosevelt by rich New Yorkers to undertake the office of special envoy to the coronation of the present King and Queen of Sweden, without any expense to the government. But the men making them did not meet with the approval of the then chief magistrate, and ultimately the task of representing him was left to the American resident envoy at Christiania.

While at Athens the special ambassadors and the members of their suite will be the guests of King Constantine and of the Greek nation. But this will only relieve them of a relatively small portion of their expenses, which include not only the trip to and from Greece, but the cost of the costly presents of jewelry, etc., commensurate with the dignity and grandeur of the country which they represent.

To all the Greek dignitaries and officials of high and low degree, with whom they may be brought into contact, as well as considerable sums of money to the servants deputed to wait upon them, and to the soldiers standing guard at their doors or escorting their carriages.

If certain peers of the British realm are displaying so much more vehemence and enthusiasm than mere commoners in inciting the people of Ulster to resist by force of arms all attempts to subject them to an Irish nationalist government after the parliamentary enactment of home rule, it is because they are virtually immune from any danger of punishment on charges of sedition or of inciting armed rebellion.

More commoners would have to answer for such offenses as these before the ordinary courts of law, if the government once made up its mind to bring charges of sedition against them—charges amply warranted by the attitude which those concerned in the Ulster agitation have been displaying for the past twelve months towards the authorities. Before these tribunals the cases would be decided on the basis of facts and law, and the judges would have no alternative, if the guilt were proved, but to impose the very heavy and harsh penalties provided for such crimes.

The peers, however, concerned in the Ulster movement are secure from any such danger. They could claim immunity from the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of law, and demand trial by their peers, that is to say, by the House of Lords sitting as the supreme tribunal of the realm. Now the Unionists possess such an overwhelming majority in the House of Lords, all bitterly opposed to home rule and in favor of the retention of the union, that it would be idle to expect them to champion to conviction any peer who had rendered himself guilty of promoting armed resistance to the home rule measures of the government.

An illustration of the manner in which the landlord system worked out in London has lately been furnished in connection with the Carlton Club, in Pall Mall, the headquarters of the Conservative party. The ground landlord is the crown. The rent for the ground, which has until now amounted to $1,000 a year, has just been increased to $12,000 a year, and the club has been obliged to spend a sum of about $200,000 in refacing the entire building with stone. It is only on these conditions that the crown consented to allow the club to retain, until the expiration of the new lease, the building, which was, nevertheless, erected by the club at its own expense.

Strictly speaking, the building now belongs to the crown. For, according to the terms of those leases by means of which inhabited property is held in London, the buildings erected by the tenant on the leased ground become the property of the crown on the expiration of the lease. It is

In this way that the enormous fortunes of the Dukes of Westminster, Bedford and Portland, of Lords Cadogan, Portman and Howard de Walden, and of the other great ground landlords, have been built up, without any expenditure on their part, these leases constituting a double, that is to say, gift-edged security, and the finest of all possible investments.

Prince S. D. Urussoff, who has just been sentenced to four months' imprisonment by the courts of St. Petersburg, on conviction of having libeled M. Pronin, president of the Nationalist Association at Kishineff, is no other than the former Governor of Bessarabia, and ex-member of the first Duma. The libel is contained in the book which he published between six and seven years ago, entitled "The Memoirs of a Governor," and which, translated into English and into other foreign languages, created so great a sensation abroad.

For, appointed to the governorship of Bessarabia almost immediately after the massacre of Kishineff, the prince made it his business to investigate the causes thereof, and while he succeeded in relieving the imperial government of its alleged complicity in the massacre, he was able to lay the responsibility of the organization of the pogrom at the doors of the building contractor, Pronin.

The latter, of peasant origin, had acquired a fortune as a builder and speculator in real estate, and had then set to work to curry popular favor by inflaming and promoting the anti-Semitic sentiments of the masses, and also of the bourgeoisie in and around Kishineff, where he had established his home.

Pronin also purchased a weekly daily paper at Kishineff, in which he preached the most reactionary doctrines. On several occasions he attempted to secure his election to the Duma, but in each instance was ignominiously defeated, largely owing to the disclosures regarding his responsibility for the massacres at Kishineff, contained in Prince Urussoff's book. It is this that led him to finally sue the prince for libel, and, although he has secured a verdict in the lower courts, the conviction is pretty certain to be set aside on appeal. Until then, however, Pronin is able to claim that he has been judicially cleared of the charges brought against him by the prince.

The prince is a man of much enlightenment, and has held the office of Deputy Minister of the Interior. He enjoyed the confidence of both Senator Plehve and of Premier Stolypin, both of whom met with their death at the hands of nihilist assassins.

Emperor Nicholas has always been well disposed towards him, and it was owing to his influence with the Czar, and to the confidence which the latter reposed in him, that he was enabled to secure the pardon and the return from Siberian deportation of his brother-in-law, Chief of Police Lopuchin, who had been unjustly divested of his office and honor and sentenced to imprisonment for life in the most remote penal settlement in Siberia. BOY FALLS DEAD IN BOXING MATCH
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Danville, Va., January 9.—Cossie Slayton, a sixteen-year-old boy, was boxing on Harrison Street at 4:30 o'clock to-day when Slayton suddenly threw up his hands and fell dead by the curb. A doctor, who arrived quickly, declared that the youth had died of heart failure, and the coroner decided that an inquest was not necessary.

Talley was bonded under the sum of $50 to appear in the Mayor's Court on Tuesday morning.

They had put on the gloves and gone many rounds together on previous days, and to-day, before Slayton started boxing with him, Cossie Talley started boxing with him.
